

I am writing in support of strong net neutrality protection because a free and open Internet is vital to a free press, progress and innovation in the sciences and technology, the consumer economy and worldwide communication generally. Infringing on the public's access to this great resource in order to make a handful of people richer would be both immoral and economically foolish.